Wait until you see Oscar, he's even more handsome in person! This stunner is a sweet, low-key boy. He's looking for a calm home to match that pace and help him get his paws back under him after the backstory he can't share that led to him arriving as a stray. Oscar does well with other laid-back dogs in our playgroups and would be open to meeting the same from a potential forever family. You can adopt this five-year-old for a fee you name through March 1 at our New Castle Campus..

WHITE CHEDDAR BEER CHEESE SOUP

Why are bananas curved?

Like all plants, banana plants have to decide when to work with or fight against the effects of gravity. This is called geotropism. When plant matter does not resist gravity's downward pull, as is the case for roots and most fruit, it's an example of positive geotropism. Negative geotropism occurs when items such as stems, leaves, and bananas expend energy to grow upward. It's that skyward growth that causes bananas to have a crescent moon-like shape. Banana plants are indigenous to the rainforests of Australia, India, and Southeast Asia where light is sparse due to the thickness of overhead tree canopies. To maximize their access to available light, bananas grow against gravity's pull.
