Football season is in full swing but just about everyone's eyes are still firmly focused on The Boys of Summer which is why this film was strategically released when it was. In MONEYBALL, everyone's eyes are firmly focused on Brad Pitt playing real-life Oakland A's general manager, Billy Beane, as he struggles to rebuild a team with the lowest competitive salaries in baseball. His struggle brings him to the concept of using statistical data to choose players, use them more effectively, and pretty much set traditional b-ball on its ear. As a lover of baseball movies, this one fits into the genre very easily. A hunk of a lead character, excellent supporting cast, the use of real game footage mixed in with the new, a hunk of a lead character, humor, warmth, a cute kid who pulls your heart strings, a happy ending, AND a hunk of a.....well, you know. Moneyball is an easy movie to watch, be entertained by, and to root for. It's a feel-good trip to the movies that causes the viewer to feel everything happened and ended just the way it should. Highly recommended by your diligent movie critic, keep in mind George Carlin's famous comparisons:

Baseball begins in the Spring, the season of new life.....

Football begins in the Fall, when everything's dying.

Football is played in any kind of weather: rain, snow, sleet, hail....

In baseball, if it rains, we don't go out to play.

In baseball, the object is to go home!

And be safe!

And we all feel safe at home!

this week in BASEBALL HISTORY

- 10-2 1965 Winning 14 their last 15 games, Los Angeles clinches the National League pennant on the next to last day of the season at Dodger Stadium. Sandy Koufax gets his 26th victory defeating Braves in the clincher. 2-1
- 10-3 1951 In Game 3 of National League play-off series at the Polo Grounds, Bobby Thompson's 'shot heard around the world' beats the Dodgers in the bottom of the ninth and the Giants win the pennant, the Giants win the pennant.
- 10-4 1969 In the first ever League Championship Series playoff game, the Mets beat the Braves 9-5 in Atlanta.
- 10-5 2001 On the last day of the season, 38-year-old Jamie Moyer (20-6) becomes the oldest first-time 20-game winner when the Mariners beat Texas at Safeco Field, 6-2. The Seattle southpaw will also compile a 21-7 in 2003.
- 10-6 1978 Despite three solo home runs off Yankees' ace Catfish Hunter by Kansas City's third baseman George Brett, the Bronx Bombers win Game 3 of the ALCS beating the Royals, 6-5.
- 10-7 1969 The Cardinals trade Curt Flood along with Byron Browne, Joe Hoerner and Tim McCarver to the Philadelphia Phillies in exchange for Dick Allen, Jerry Johnson and Cookie Rojas. When Flood refuses to report Philadelphia, St. Louis will send Willie Montanez and a minor leaguer complete the trade, but the outfielder's courageous challenge to the reserve clause will have a dramatic impact on the game.
- 10-8 1973 The Mets 9-2 victory over the Reds in Game 3 of the NLCS will best be remembered for the Pete Rose and Bud Harrelson brawl. Mets' feisty shortstop takes exception to 'Charlie Hustle's' hard slide to break up a double play.

Eggs

are a great any time of the day, whether it be for breakfast, lunch or dinner or even a quick snack, eggs provide a ton of nutrition for a low cost and they don't take long to prepare. So what kinds of eggs should you choose? Well here are some of the different ways eggs are marketed in the US.

Hormone free: The use of hormones in poultry has been banned since the 1960s. So by law, all eggs are hormone-free. If a carton offers this claim alone, it's a waste of money if it costs more.

Natural: This is another meaningless term. According to regulations from the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration, no additives or colors can ever be added to eggs.

Cage-free or Free-roaming: Over 90% of hens are raised in cages that are between 48 and 68 square inches. Birds that are cage-free or free-roaming are not caged; however, they likely were still raised within the confines of a small building and generally do not have access to the outdoors. So this is a distinction without much of a difference.

Grass-fed: There is definition of this term hens. Farms touting hens claim their being "wild" as hens are usually freely and so they things found in their grass, bugs, and they might catch.

no USDA-approved when it comes to grass-fed egg laying hens are as close to possible. Grass-fed allowed to roam eat a variety of natural habitat: whatever animals

Certified humane: For a farm to make this claim, it must meet specific criteria: The hens may not be caged; their feed must be vegetarian and contain no antibiotics; and the birds need to live in a natural environment that allows for behaviors like preening and scratching.

Fertile: These are eggs that, when incubated, will develop into chicks. They are no more nutritious than other eggs and are usually priced higher than others. Usually fertile eggs are cage free and come from hen houses where roosters roam as well; some consumers believe this is a more natural habitat.

USDA-certified organic: This means that the hens have eaten only organic feed and grain grown without fungicides, herbicides, commercial fertilizers, and pesticides and that their diet hasn't contained any animal or poultry by-products. The hens also have not been given any antibiotics or growth hormones, and they've been allowed access to the outdoor.

So what are the best eggs for your nutrition buck?

Look for pastured eggs or those that have access to the outdoors (although this is no guarantee); also get to know your local farmers and find out how their chickens are raised – this is your best bet for the best nutrition and for supporting your local economy and community.

Know the 10 Signs

Monday, October 3 @ 7 pm

Description: Provides a greater understanding of the difference between age-related memory loss and dementia and what to do if they have signs of Alzheimer's disease. The program encourages early detection and provides individuals with the knowledge to accurately spot the signs of memory loss and behavior changes characteristic of dementia.

Arnold Berke has been writing for Preservation magazine for 25 years. He writes in the current issue...

Every so often, a new city comes along to impress me, making me wonder: Where have you been all my life?

That was my reaction to Wilmington, Del., a historic city I'd often seen from Amtrak or the interstate but always passed through. Until recently, that is, when growing curiosity finally lured me into town.

Purple Carrot

The ancestral home of this carrot is Afghanistan, where it figures largely in the cookery of that country. However, this has been a well-known variety in Europe since the Middle Ages and was used by the Dutch to create the cross with the Lemon Carrot that resulted in the race of orange carrots we know today. Because it turns brown when cooked, the violet carrot has never been a great favorite of chefs, but light cooking retains the color, and it is extremely ornamental in raw salads.
